An essay (French experience, sample, attempt, sketch, essay) is a short scientific written work in which a student must reveal a narrow problem issue. The difference between an essay and other scientific works is in the brief presentation of the material on the proposed topic. The essay should include an independent analysis of the problem using the analytical tools considered within the discipline and conclusions summarizing the author's position.

How to write an essay

This essay develops only one thought. At the same time, the content of a question may cover a wide range of problems that require a large amount of literature. Based on the decision on how to answer a question, the author should make a plan/structure for his answer. In the introduction, it is necessary to formulate the purpose and objectives of the research, as well as provide a brief definition of the concepts and key terms used in the work. The content of the main part of the essay suggests the development of author's arguments and analysis of the problem under study. Filling the content of the subject sections (under the appropriate subheadings) it is important to limit the paragraph to the consideration of one main idea. There are no unambiguously "right" or "wrong" answers to questions in the problems of humanities or economics under study, as is the case, for example, in physics or mathematics, but only more or less reasoned points of view.

In presenting one's own position, the focus is on the ability to critically and independently assess the range of data and the viewpoints/arguments of others, the ability to understand the essence of the problems and questions being studied, to make connections between the key points of any problems, to use an analytical approach in addressing them, and to differentiate and rank (which is more or less important). The evidence used, including statistics, is illustrative, i.e. it supports the arguments.

The final part of the essay should contain a summary of the research results in the form of a summary of the main arguments of the author. The collected factual and digital material should be systematized, i.e., it should be summarized in tables, diagrams, graphs, and schemes. They can be presented as an application. All the digital and factual material presented in the work should be decorated with footnotes. The literal presentation of the literature read is unacceptable, because it contradicts the meaning of the essay, does not create the conditions for the development of personal opinion.
